Two McCallas Awarded in Education

Charles Anderson and M. Kazim Bacchus, both in the Faculty of Education, are the most recent recipients of McCalla Research Professorships. For a nine-month period beginning 1 September 1984 they will set aside their regular teaching and administrative duties in order to concentrate more fully on research.

For Dr. Anderson, Professor of Educational Psychology, the award means time to write a scholarly monograph based on his studies of people in the milieu of industrial societies. Since joining the University in 1957, Dr. Anderson's teaching and research have centred on personality and social psychology as these impinge upon education. Recently his interests have shifted in the direction of broader theoretical explorations. The central element of his current research, that which will act as the foundation for the monograph, involves applying the concept of possessive individualism to describe the social character of various groups.

More specifically, Dr. Anderson's analysis is based on the thesis that, for a variety of reasons, possessive individualism is more characteristic of North American than of other industrial societies. His research encompasses social documentation and the measurement of possessive individualism in samples of students. The McCalla Professorship will enable Dr. Anderson to complete his studies into the social and educational correlates of possessive individualism.

A graduate of the University of Glasgow and Cambridge University, Dr. Anderson joined the staff of the Department of Educational Psychology at our University in 1957. He has many publications to his credit and has acquired a reputation as an academic "devoted to questioning and challenging conventional approaches to psychology."

Kazim Bacchus is a Professor of Educational Foundations. His area of concentration in both teaching and research is that of education and social change in developing countries. His current research project focusses on curriculum change in the former British West Indies from the 1840s to the 1940s. The work is oriented toward the development of a model of curriculum change at the macro level of society and involves examining the influence exerted on these changes by political and economic interest groups.

Dr. Bacchus began collecting the material for his project some years ago through visits to London and the West Indies. By the time he begins his McCalla, he will have completed the data collection and will be able to concentrate on analyzing the data and on developing a manuscript for a monograph on the curriculum aspects of the study.

A graduate of the London School of Economics and the University of London, Dr. Bacchus came to this University in 1969. He has taught in Guyana and London, was a Visiting Fellow at the University of Chicago (1973-74), and a Visiting Scholar at Stanford University in 1980. He is currently a Professor in the Sociology of Education (specializing in Education and Third World Development), and the Director of the University's Centre for International Education and Development. □

Long Time Employees Honored

The Board of Governors honored members of the University family last Wednesday, 25 January, at its annual fête for long term staff. In all, 60 members of the academic and non-academic staff received tokens of the University's appreciation of their combined 1,650 years of service to the institution.

The largest group honored was that of the 25 year variety; the smallest "group" was Stu Davis who has taught physical and inorganic chemistry at this University for 40 years. In thanking the Board of Governors on behalf of the honorees and their guests, Dr. Davis expressed surprise at the youth of the other long service employees.
